Hello, folks. I just ran across this very visual example of what we are facing in the problem of stormwater runoff vs. pollution from individual family residences along the shoreline. The link below shows an example of a 'plume' of pollutants coming from street runoff in the Alki area of West Seattle (plume starts at 56 seconds into the video).

For me, this helps illustrate the scope of the problem relative to other, potentially less relevant sources such as those currently being addressed by the SMP proceedings.
